I answered the call of my own heart to bring a new form of relating to humanity and helped launch the early Coaching industry. When I heard a fellow manager at my first corporate job pray to be able to “just hide out under his desk until he could retire,” I knew I had to assist people to make their best contribution without needless suffering.

I love to bring leading edge strategies and processes to clients through coaching, training, facilitation, and speaking. I work with executives, professionals, business owners and their teams - in short, extraordinary people with a vision for a wonderful life. My approach is intuitive and I draw on a large set of models and tools to develop clients as people and move them towards their goals. I'm known for teaching people to focus on what is working and leading from their strengths. I connect people: leaders to their teams, salespeople to their clients, coachees to ideas and their own wisdom, and heads to hearts.

My background includes extensive business experience -- over 30 years' experience in sales, management, coaching and training including 12 years of corporate sales and management at AT&T serving accounts in the financial services industry in Manhattan and across industries on Long Island in Sales and Sales Management. Combined with my life-long passion for personal development and a gift for intuition, I help clients achieve results. I hold the Master Certified Coach designation from the International Coach Federation and have a BA in Psychology and Business from Boston College.
